What's the answer once more'

One suggestion might be environment. There is as much psychology to the game as there is physical and mental. The average athlete is fairly well plugged with temperament, and when this temperament springs a puncture, nothing but a shift will repair the leak.

In addition to those cases mentioned we have an idea that Mathewson, Wagner, Johnson, Cobb and a few others would still be fairly good ball players if set down in the South Sea Islands. They, too, have temperament, but not enough to warp their natural stuff.

> The announcement is sure to prove popular with the golfing talent in Washington and it would not be surprising to find a gallery of more than 3,000 out for the match between the greatest golfers in the world,

> Vardon and Ray are at the top their profession and will be the greatest of drawing cards. It was supposed that Washington would not come on their itinerary, but the announcement made today is one calculated to stimulate interest to a great degree.

In getting the professionals the two clubs are bound to make a big hit with the golfers in Washington and this section of the country. Both Vardon and and Ray command attention from golfers and the uninitiated because of the general excellence of their play. Vardon's last visit to this country was years ago when he was open champion of Great Britain. He has been a co tender for the title since 1893 and has won it no less than five times. Ray is also a former champion and one of the longest drivers in the game,

While arrangements are being mad While arrangements are being made for the fall tourneys at other clubs, golf in the District is not nearly as thriving as it is farther North at this time. Washington golfers will begin in the next month for the fall campaign, which will take them well on toward the winter.

October and November at Chevy Chase are the big months, and while Columbia continues to have an uninterrupted season, as does the Washington Country Club. Chevy Chase has fallen off in attendance on the links.

The Washington Country Club is getting to be more than popular. Recent improvements have made the clubbouse attractive, and during this week more interior work is being done to the extent that the country club is making a decided by decided hit.
